Here's a list of what you can do using Photoshop: A raster image is made of pixels -- dots of color or gray shades. A digital camera captures the dots and converts them into an image file. You can manipulate an image by touching, moving, and resizing it and can even change the color, shape, or size of the image. Layers are collections of images that you can move, resize, or add to. An object is a part of the image that you can pick and move, resize, or copy and paste. You can manipulate the individual pixels in an image by using the Spot Healing Brush, Content-Aware Fill, Pixel Perfect, or Trim tool. New is an opaque layer that you create as a new image, then copy over an existing image. Layer Mask is a transparent layer that you can move around the image, keeping the pixels in its underlying layer visible. Masking is a feature of the Content-Aware Fill tool that allows you to temporarily hide an object with a patterned mask. You can use the mask as you like and then remove it at any time. Paths (also known as `_walls_`) are line-like selections that you can move around the canvas. With the Pen tool, you can trace and connect two points, as shown in the image here. Pen tool enables you to stroke around the drawing area. Layer styles work like masks -- you draw on the layer with a predefined color or pattern, and the style is applied to that portion. Fill is a selection that you use to hide or show a background color. Here are some quick questions and answers to help you understand the basics of Photoshop: What is the difference between a raster image and an illustration? What is the difference between vector images and raster images? What are the different layers in Photoshop? What is the difference between paint and layer? What is the difference between a pattern and a layer style? What are some of the common uses of Photoshop layers? What is the difference between a mask and a selection? What is the difference between a layer mask and a selection? What is the difference between a layer style and a filter? What is the difference between

Tuesday, June 5, 2009 We love Lili. She's a beautiful baby, and a very friendly and smart dog. She has been since we first brought her home on January 1st (2005). She is a Boxer; but has about 20 other breeds in her ancestry, and my mom always insisted that she was a Boxer. She's also short-haired, so some people think she's a Chihuahua, but she's not. Today, Lili had an appointment with the vet clinic about a week ago. She had a pinched nerve in her tail, and when we saw her, she was having a difficult time getting up and down. She's always been like this, but we thought it would get better as she gets older. The dr. wanted us to bring her in right away for an x-ray, but when we got there, he had to leave. We waited about an hour, and then went back to get her x-rayed, and it showed that there was very little room in the bone where her tail was pinched. He said that she'd have to go to a holistic doctor for surgery, and that it would be two days before he got her appointment. Then, they only had the appointment two days in advance, so it would have to be on Thursday. It's a very good thing that the dr. knew that Lili was going to have surgery soon, because on Wednesday, she started to get very very very ill. She started vomiting; and when I took her outside, she wouldn't walk on her hind legs, and was just doing her business outside. That night, I put her on a heating pad to keep her warm, and I put her on antibiotics and gave her a pain reliever. She felt better after that, but as time went on, she just laid in her bed and didn't get up. By Friday afternoon, I'd had enough of it. I put her on antibiotics again, and gave her a pain reliever and had her dry. I took her to the holistic dr. on Saturday, and she gave me a couple of pills and said that it would "help for awhile". For awhile, it did help. But then, I had to give her the pills for the next three days, which seemed to be helping her more than I would like. It takes awhile for the medication to do its work, and it takes awhile for the inflammation to go away.
