Interpretive Structural Modeling (ISM) is used to develop a . We used Agisoft Photoscan Structure-from-Motion photogrammetric software to . To evaluate the accuracy in the model, we entered data into the NST database for 10 different models, one of which was created by this program. The results obtained were ambiguous. For example, models with a large number of details (for example, cars), as a rule, turned out to be more accurate than models with a smaller number of parts (for example, buildings). However, models with fewer parts turned out to be more accurate than models with a large number of details.
