Q: How to get the latest Objectid from MongoDB collection? I'd like to store the newest ObjectId in the database if there is already one with the same name, but I don't know how to get the newest value in the list. Here is an example: [{name: 'bla'}, {name: 'flip'}, {name: 'bla'}] I'd like to make sure that the value with name 'flip' is stored, as it is the latest one. What would be the best way of doing this? A: You can use toArray for this. MongoDB emits a BSON Array for a BSONObject, and the latest element of an Array is the only element which has an index of -1. db.collection.findOne({}, {name: 1}, {name: -1}).value.name It is used to get the last element of the array, but for your case to get the last element of a sub-document you can change the path of the first $sort operator to a -1 indexPath: db.collection.aggregate([{ $sort: { name: 1 } }, { $sort: { name: -1 } }, { $sort: { name: -1 } }, { $project: { name: 1,

I'm really digging the way that you've run this. It's (to me) one of the more unique illustrations I've seen on a forum, and I really like the underlying message that it communicates. I don't know what really fuels this, though. I'm definitely not your target demographic; I am, however, a pretty shy, awkward guy who does enjoy Super Smash Bros, so it's not that I have no understanding of what you're getting at. Maybe I can say a few things about my own experience in regards to this. I didn't really have any standard comic book heroes as a child; they were typically mainly film-based. I had a lot of superheroes that, according to the norm, are considered "antiheroes", and yet I liked them, because I liked the type of character that they were. In fact, I liked comic book superheroes as a genre because of all the characters that I liked. Also, the closest to a normal hero that I ever saw when I was younger, outside of real-life heroes, was Superman (it was the 80s, so I really didn't see much of anything outside of the "family friendly" movies). Superman was the best hero I could remember seeing for quite some time. Of course, as I got older and found myself in an environment that allowed me to read comic books, I started discovering super-powered characters who were further than the norm, and who were actually normal people who happened to have powers. Suddenly, the comics were good again; I even began to appreciate that there was depth to superheroes in the form of character writing and characterization, which I hadn't really appreciated in the past. Of course, the biggest superhero hit of the past decade was the non-comic book movie Spider-Man. As well as the continued "reboot" of DC's Batman. But it's not just that; comic book movies were the biggest thing in cinema last year. Everyone had an opinion and everyone took sides, and now we have real life (i.e., non-superhero, non-supernatural) superheroes. I think that this "zombie" takes on the meta-ethical position that "Movies are art", just as art is a subset of the "real world" -- I just think that it shows that "real life" has really, really caught up to the realm of superheroes. Anyway, that's just some of the thought
