Chios, Thesprotia and Cherek were allotted by the Republic of Turkey to a new province called Aydin. At the same time, the entire western border region of Turkey was set up as a separate Turkish state called Adrianople. The new state was inaugurated in 1920 with a Turkish-Christian as the first president. Until then, Turkey had been a secular state with a constitution guaranteeing non-sectarian privileges for all ethnic groups. 5. Since the Great War, the small Turkish state has annexed the entire mainland territory of Greece between 1923 and 1929, either with or without a mandate from the Great Powers. 6. By the end of the War, Germany had the most powerful army on the battlefield and the strongest navy on the entire Atlantic coast. It also possessed a huge stockpile of poisonous gas, including phosgene, that it used in World War I against the Russians, the French and the Italian allies. There were also attempts to use poison gas against Britain, but the gas turned out to be unfit to be used in the planned invasion of Britain. 7. Germany wanted to use poison gas in a major offensive against the Allies, but a British and French spy revealed this to the Russians, who warned the Allies. Germany was forced to call off the offensive, despite the fact that the Allies were exhausted from fighting the Russian invasion of Poland. For this reason, the Allies recognized German right of self-defense against a Russian attack from November 1939 to March 1940, when Germany declared war on the United Kingdom and France. 8. During the war, Germany introduced the Enigma cipher machine. This made cryptanalysis a much more difficult task. 9. Hitler set up concentration camps to imprison Jews, communists, unionists, gypsies and homosexuals. In July 1941, the Germans decided to separate German Jews from other prisoners. 10. The German invasion of Yugoslavia resulted in the deaths of 7,000 civilians from c6a93da74d
